

House by the River

Atlanta, Georgia

What do you do when a client's landscape vision means cutting into the side of a rocky slope? You fulfill that vision by creating a unique and personal space through a thoughtful design process that makes a connection between the project site and the existing architecture.

BEFORE

This particular project site presented some intense and specific slope challenges. Still, the family wanted to create an outdoor space with a two-car garage, grilling space, a dining area, a fireplace and water feature, in addition to a children's lawn and recreation area.
